Setting Goals for Understanding Truth in 2022

EVANS, GA. — As parents and educators step foot into a new year, they understand that truth, specifically absolute truth, is difficult to find in today's culture. So what are Christian parents and educators to do? And how do Christians teach younger generations about absolute truth in such a unique culture?

"A lot of times, as Christians, it's tricky to cover the concept of truth because truth isn't directly outlined in Scripture," Elizabeth Urbanowicz, Founder and CEO of Foundation Worldview, said on Mike Winger's YouTube channel in 2021. "150 years ago, no matter what worldview you adhered to, you thought that truth was true for everyone; that truth was objective; that there was absolute truth out there. Now our culture believes something so completely different."

The Barna Group released a research report in 2016 titled, "The End of Absolutes: Americas New Moral Code." That report concluded that Americans are grappling with this idea of truth. Three-quarters of Millennials (74%) agree strongly or somewhat with the statement, "Whatever is right for your life or works best for you is the only truth you can know." That same report found two-thirds of American adults either believe moral truth is relative to circumstances (44%) or have not given it much thought (21%). Millennials are more likely than other age cohorts to say moral truth is relative—in fact, half of them say so (51%).

Foundation Worldview has developed curricula for children, beginning at age 4 on up to age 14. This curricula "transforms the way kids think - equipping them to carefully evaluate every idea they encounter and understand the truth of the Christian worldview." Foundation Worldview wants to help parents and educators in 2022 as they help children understand truth.

"Usually, the older the child is when we start working with them on truth, the more deeply engrained culture is and the more reformative work we have to do," Urbanowicz said. "If we can begin teaching preschoolers and early elementary students to think about the concept of truth, we can be much more formative than reformative in our work."
